Media Release

nabtrade the first bank aligned broker to support ASX BookBuild

nabtrade has today announced its customers can access the ASX BookBuild facility, meaning they'll have access to more initial public offerings (IPOs) and capital raisings.

nabtrade General Manager, Nathan Walsh said customers would now have the chance to participate in a greater number of IPOs and capital raisings and will benefit from not having to pay brokerage or stamp duty on these transactions.

"This is a great opportunity for nabtrade customers to access investments that have at times been historically difficult to access," Mr Walsh said.

"After speaking to our customers, it was clear that they wanted more access to more primary market transactions."

"We're very proud to be the first bank aligned broker to give our customers access to the ASX BookBuild facility, and this further demonstrates our support for Australian financial technology companies."

Ben Bucknell, CEO of On-Market BookBuilds, the fintech company that created the intellectual property behind the ASX BookBuild facility and licenced it to the ASX, said nabtrade had again shown its commitment to ensuring it provides leading technological solutions for its customers.

"We are delighted to have nabtrade on board. This is good for their customers, and good for ASX listed companies who can now have greater access to potential investors when they raise capital using the ASX BookBuild facility," Mr Bucknell said.
